One decade and two years ago we brought forth upon these school grounds a new class with tears in our eyes and mama on our lips. After the tears were dried and no longer did we need mama's hand, school at last began.

Then we were engaged in a great learning process - testing whether this class or any other class could endure twelve years of learning. We met here in a small classroom to combat that war---education. We came to dedicate our waking hours to the process of abolishing school to save those who shall come in later years. It seemed altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

But in later years we came to hold this learning process to be necessary and essential. The pupils now and those who struggled before us have taught us something that we can neither mar nor destroy. Now we must finish the great task before us---graduation. From our teachers we take increased knowledge for which we have great need. We take from these men and women facts and figures for our use tomorrow. After these years we highly resolve that these men and women have not taught in vain. We resolve to ever work to keep our class motto "the biggest mistake is giving up."

We shall not forget our school colors, red and white, under which we have fought for victory and recognition, nor the colors of our class, yellow and white. We shall not forget those who helped to make graduation possible; Mrs. Cola Brown, the girls' sponsor for four years, Mr. Carl Smith, the boys' sponsor for one year, and Mr. Joe Milam, the boys' sponsor for three years.

The school will little note nor long remember us but we will never forget what we did here.

Class Prophecy

As a United Nations global observer closely watches his array of flashing lights, navigational instruments, and super fantastic scanning screens, he decides to take a closer look at the surface of the earth, which at the moment he is passing over at a speed of 14,000 miles per hour and at an altitude of 5,000 miles. He is orbiting the earth in a one man Peace Preserver Vehicle, designed to spot aggression early.

Because the job is a dull one and the last few days being uneventful, the crewman slowly increases power of his scanning screens, locking them on a certain area and receives unbelievably clear and close-up view of Kentucky below.

Slowly the green rolling hills come into clear view, and with another half turn buildings take shape. As the power is increased the figures of people gathered in a large group begin to take form!

From the baskets and spreads on the ground he has deducted that the get together is a picnic.

Now if he could only hear what was being said, he would know that it was a picnic for the tenth reunion of the 1968 Senior Class of Lewisburg High School.

While knowing none of them, he watches the crowd containing many people, such as:
